JOHN DOE TROUBLE

'John Doe' Trouble headed up the famous and, some might say, infamous 'Trouble Squad' in Afghanistan during multiple tours of duty. Decorated, highly awarded and finally back in civilian life, Trouble's right hand man and best friend, Hector 'Nacho' Hernandez, is shot dead in what seems a senseless drive-by shooting. Pursuing information about what happened, Trouble becomes enmeshed in a spider web of corruption that leads to a powerful drug lord in Mexico. Assembling the 'squad', these trained warriors wind up taking on one of the most powerful, well-equipped cartels in the world.

StarStruck

The scientist and philosopher Galileo Galilei (1564-1642) was the first person to use a telescope to study the skies. He was able to gather evidence that convinced him that the Copernican Theory that the earth revolved around the sun was correct.

His adamant adherence to this angered the Catholic Church and in 1633 he suffered one of the greatest betrayals in history when his best friend and admirer, Cardinal Maffeo Barberini, then Pope Urban VIII, forced his trial by the Inquisition in Rome. Being found guilty of heresy, he was ordered to recant, his books were banned, and he was sentenced to spend the remainder of his life under house arrest.

“StarStruck” is a compelling and sometimes disturbing journey into the very depths of a man’s soul.
